Should the submarine boat take the place in naval warfare that some na-tions expect, one of the chief precau-tions taken by the world's navies will tions taken by the world's navies will be an immense increase in the number of balloons, with duly trained staffs to work them, carried by war vessels. The balloons carried by these battleships are of exactly the same material and pattern as those in use in the army, only smaller. They have a use far in advance of any mere long-distance observational purpose, for, though the wake of a submarine boat sunk deeply in the water can only be traced with difficulty from such an elevation as that afforded by a ship, both such wake and the boat itself can be seen with absolute and undeviating clearness from a captive balloon. This is the result of a scientific and optical law, and when ship balloons were first put to the practical test in regard to this matter, the results attained were of the most surprising kind. An autograph hunter, who was very anxious to obtain the signature of the poet Campbell, adopted the familiar strategem. Having come across a line in one of his poems, the meaning of which appeared to be obscure, he wrote a short note to the author, asking him to interpret the words in question. He received the following laconic reply: "Sir: In return to your note, I send you my autograph.—Thomas Campbell."

Richard Brinsley Sheridan was one day dining with Lord Thurlow, when forest, he says: day dining with Lord Thurlow, when his lordship produced some fine Constantia, which had been sent him from the Cape of Good Hope. Sheridan, who saw the bettle emptted with uncommon regret, set his wits to work to get another. Failing in his attempt, however, he turned toward a gentleman seated further down, and said: "Sir, pass me up that decanter; for I must return to Madeira, since I cannot double the Cape."

val of Tongue of Man

True Primeval of Tongue of Man Unlike Any Language We Know.

The original speech, the true primeval tongue of man, was quite unlike any language we have ever heard; yet we have all talked it and all the elements are present in the tongues of today, says the Contemporary. The primeval language was a vowel language altogether; it had no consonants, or contacts, as we ought to call them, at all. Its words consisted of vowel sounds following each other, repeated or varied—of words like aeeae, aoao, ala, auau, acola, laua,oloi, ouou, uaua, ueue, all of which, I may say in passing, are taken from a language in use today. The sentences were intermittent streams of vowels, each stream held on so long as the speaker's breath allowed or whim dictated. When all literature was recited, the same consideration, the capacity of the lungs, determined the length of the bardic line; so we have our shlokas, our hexameters, our Alexandrines and so forth, each a lungful of verse. In the primeval tongue it was likewise, but the sentences were vowels only. There are about ten or a dozen pure vowels to go upon, and vowel words may run up to five syllables; so we have a very considerable fund to draw of our vowel streams. And these streams of vowel speech correspond to any expressed streams of emotion or feeling rather than descriptions of concrete objects. For we hardly realize how terribly overladen with material trifics our life is today, and therefore what great demands we make on language for concrete words. But our exclamations, each of which indicates a single word emotion, tend to remain pure vowel sounds even at the present ady.

Table Mountain Ropeway. Engineering Magazine: The way located at Table Mountain is a important example of a line 5,280 feet long. It consists of a single fixed rope on which one carriage is drawn to and fro with an endless hauling rope, the driving gear having revers-ing motion so that the direction of travel of the carrier can be controlled. Commencing at sea level, and follow-ing the ground on posts spaced about 300 feet apart, the cable takes a span of 1,500 feet, rising to a projecting rock some 1,480 feet above the starting point. Resting on a support at this point, the cable again takes a span of 1,400 feet to an upper terminal 2,200 feet above the lower one. This ropeway has worked so satisfactorily that it is not only used for the carriage of materials employed in the construction of a reservoir but is at times used for passengers.
